TOMORROW’S SUSTAINABLE OLYMPIC VILLAGE

In the present day, it may be difficult to find someone unaware of the Olympic Games which, since their origins in Ancient Greece, have brought different people together in a peaceful, yet competitive celebration of shared humanity.

These gatherings reach their apex in concentration and symbolism within the confines of the Olympic village. This special village has always been the nerve center of the Games; meeting point for all the athletes. Its definition has evolved many times since the Greeks. While the Games themselves and the Olympic Village have often been seen as a transient object, there is a growing need to redefine the consumption of the Olympic Games and put them at the service of the host city, of the users. Thus the Olympic Village in particular is not built to be an object of greed but a process in time that meets the needs of the host city. It is an opportunity, a lever, to respond in an innovative, responsible and sustainable way to the problems of the city concerned, but also and above all of the world’s society in the 21st century.

Sport, sustainability, health and social services, food and beverages, contribute to a bustling internal economy and play a crucial role in a short-lived urban microcosm.

It is in light of this value, competition, and celebration of shared humanity that we want to assemble tomorrow’s actors and thinkers, represented by students with whom the messages of diversity of thought and trade will echo. In a team-based competition mimicking the spirit of the Village itself, participants will have twenty-four hours to realize what each one can bring to the project while the clock keeps ticking.
